Reginald Guerrier concentrates his practice in commercial real estate, affordable housing and community development, and related transactional matters. His background encompasses commercial real estate law, municipal representation, and nonprofit and faith-based community development.

Prior to joining Goldstein Hall, Reginald practiced at a New York-based law firm, where he focused primarily on commercial real estate tax certiorari, representing property owners, developers, investors, and business owners in property tax assessment challenges. His experience also includes commercial leasing, real estate acquisitions and dispositions, and commercial real estate litigation.

Previously, Reginald served as municipal counsel, handling matters involving commercial real estate transactions, the disposition of publicly owned properties, and commercial real estate tax litigation.

Reginald also brings extensive experience in nonprofit leadership and faith-based community development through his experience as a pastor and conference director. His work has involved institutional real estate and community development initiatives, collaboration with community stakeholders, service on community boards, engagement with the New York State Attorney General's Office, and appearances before zoning boards. His background combines legal experience with a practical understanding of institutional governance, governmental processes, and the community interests that influence real estate development.

Reginald is a member of the Long Island Builders Institute, the Long Island Association, and is licensed in NY.
